Transcript Summary:

[00.00.00] Intro - [00.00.30 - 00:01:30] Overview of hop-picking history - changes since 1900 when hops were farmed all over the country e.g. - South Scotland, Northern England - World War 2 (WW2) hops were dug up and food planted e.g.: - potatoes craft - when hops replanted after WW2 WILT had been introduced - [00.01.40] - 1950s - 1960s mechanisation of hop picking - fewer people needed

[00.02.25] changes in fuel used to dry hops - [00.02.50] specialised farms - hops grown where there was a guaranteed labour source from people working in factories and good land - Kent, Herefordshire and Worcestershire - [00.03.30] history of beer use of hops - globalisation of brewing industry - hops became a low cost commodity until revolution of craft brewing - boom in UK and US breweries - emphasis on highly hopped beers

[00.07.00] hop growing calendar and techniques - [00.10.30.00] - challenges around labour supply, trade and uncertainty of future - [00.11.00] opportunities going forward

[00.12.20] - personal background and memories. [00.13.00] the scratch of the hop, the addictiveness and the sensory qualities. [00.17.30] - noise and drama of hop picking machinery - childhood memories of small hop trailers - people picking up fallen bines from the road if they were lucky

[00.18.40] - importance of recording for hop history for local community - importance to infrastructure - farming disconnected from cities - historic reference combined with modern account will hopefully reconnect beer drinkers with where hops come from today and all the history that comes with it

[00.19.40] - American visitors to farm love the history, landscapes and buildings - hops responsible for lots of architecture.
